SUBJECT: Landlord-Tenant Disputes and Law Enforcement

As we have learned over the past several months, the COVID-19 pandemic presents an unprecedented threat to the health, safety, and well-being of our communities. There is no question that law enforcement has been on the front lines of this crisis. I remain grateful for everything you have done and for your continued partnership during these challenging times.

On April 6, 2020, this Office issued guidance to law enforcement officials on landlord-tenant disputes. That guidance primarily concerned how law enforcement should respond to instances of self-help evictions—cases in which landlords illegally remove (or attempt to remove) a tenant from leased premises without going through the required court process. In self-help eviction cases, a landlord may (or may attempt to) forcibly remove a tenant, change the tenant’s locks, remove the tenant’s property, or reduce or discontinue essential services like water or electricity in order to force tenants to move out. This conduct is unlawful.

In the months immediately following the issuance of the guidance, community organizations reported that instances of self-help evictions by landlords had declined. We also received reports of law enforcement helping tenants whose landlords attempted self-help evictions, including a case in which an officer required a landlord to turn a tenant’s electricity back on. I commend you for your efforts to protect Rhode Island families during such a difficult and pivotal period.

Unfortunately, in recent weeks this Office has, once again, received reports of an increasing number of self-help evictions. A recent federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) order that, in many cases, makes it illegal for landlords to evict tenants until at least December 31, 2020 may be contributing to this misconduct.¹ Some landlords, trying to circumvent the CDC Order, may resort to self-help eviction tactics.

These tactics are unlawful. With the COVID-19 pandemic continuing to heighten the dangers and public health consequences of housing instability, we can all agree that preventing or prosecuting self-help evictions must remain a law enforcement priority.

In the event that illegal self-help eviction tactics are attempted or used by a landlord, this Office is prepared to prosecute these matters in the District Court if that is a municipality’s preference. Case-specific questions can be directed to Stephen Dambruch, Criminal Chief, at 274-4400, extension 2503. You are also always welcome to contact me directly on my cell phone or at the office at extension 2338.

Cases may also arise in which a tenant alleges non-criminal conduct by a landlord, but the tenant’s housing may nevertheless be in jeopardy. In such cases, officers should be directed to refer the tenant to Rhode Island Legal Services (401-274-2652) and/or the Rhode Island Center for Justice (401-491-1101) for help with a civil legal claim.

Thank you again for your attention to this pressing issue and for your commitment to protecting the safety of all Rhode Islanders during the unprecedented challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic. An updated version of the guidance is enclosed for your reference.

GUIDANCE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS
ON LANDLORD-TENANT DISPUTES

Are self-help evictions, where the landlord attempts to take matters into his or her own hands, unlawful?

Yes. Under the Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, the landlord may not attempt to recover or take possession of a rental unit outside the court process. The landlord is further prohibited from shutting off or causing the interruption of the tenant’s heat, water, electric, and gas services. R.I.G.L. § 34-18-44.

Is there a criminal statute that applies to unlawful entry?

An unlawful entry may constitute a willful trespass under R.I.G.L. § 11-44-26, which is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000 and a prison term not to exceed one year. If the landlord enters or remains in a rental unit after being asked not to enter or to leave by the tenant, this may constitute a willful trespass, provided that none of the circumstances permitting entry without the tenant's consent apply.

You should use your discretion and consult your city or town solicitor or this office in deciding whether to charge a landlord with willful trespass. In many cases, by the time police arrive, the violation will have already occurred, and the landlord will no longer be present on the property. If no damage was done to the tenant’s possessions and you believe that the landlord did not understand the law, it may be sufficient to inform the landlord of the law and warn him or her against future violations. Charges should be considered for a landlord who ignores warnings and repeatedly engages in willful trespass.

Are there civil or criminal statutes that apply if the landlord attempts to remove the tenant’s property?

If, during a self-help eviction, the landlord maliciously damages or causes the tenant’s property to be destroyed, this may constitute vandalism under R.I.G.L. § 11-44-1, which is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000 and a prison term not to exceed one year. If the landlord willfully breaks a lamp or window, that is also a criminal offense punishable by a $200 fine. R.I. Gen. Laws §11-44-14.

When is entry by the landlord to a rental unit unlawful?

Under the Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, the landlord may not enter the tenant’s unit without the tenant’s consent, except in limited circumstances.

These limited circumstances are:

- In cases of emergency
- With a court order
- During any absence of the tenant in excess of 7 days, if reasonably necessary for the protection of the property.
• If the tenant has failed to maintain the rental unit in a manner materially affecting health and safety and (1) an emergency repair or replacement is necessary or (2) 20 days after written notice from the landlord

• The tenant has abandoned or surrendered the premises

Entry by the landlord, without the tenant’s consent, for any other purpose is unlawful.

Are there other limitations on landlord entry?

Yes. In addition to needing the tenant’s consent, for the landlord’s entry to be lawful the landlord must:

• Provide notice to the tenant: the landlord must give the tenant at least 2-days’ notice of his or her intent to enter, except in case of emergency or unless it is impracticable to do so.

• Enter at reasonable hours: the landlord may only enter the unit at reasonable times.

• Avoid harassing the tenant: the landlord cannot abuse the right of entry or use the right of entry to harass the tenant.

Even if the landlord gives reasonable notice, the tenant must still consent to the entry. However, a tenant may not unreasonably withhold his/her consent for the landlord to enter into the dwelling unit in order to inspect the premises, make necessary or agreed repairs, decorations, alterations, or improvements, supply necessary or agreed services, or exhibit the dwelling unit to prospective or actual purchasers, mortgagees, tenants, workers, or contractors. R.I.G.L. § 34-18-26. R.I.G.L § 34-18-26.

If the tenant won’t let the landlord in, what is the landlord supposed to do?

The Residential Landlord and Tenant Act requires the tenant not to withhold consent unreasonably. If the tenant unreasonably refuses to let the landlord in, the landlord may go to court to get a court order and may have grounds to evict the tenant for violation of the lease or the Act. R.I.G.L. §§34-18-26, 34-18-5.

Are there other ways to stop a self-help eviction?

Yes. If the landlord attempts to remove the tenant without a court order, the tenant may seek a court order enjoining or stopping the landlord. R.I.G.L. § 34-18-44. In addition to informing a landlord that entry on to a tenant’s property to accomplish a self-help eviction may be criminal, you can advise the tenant to contact Rhode Island Legal Services ((401) 274-2652.) or the Center for Justice (401-491-1101).
